

The e-learning revolution

[“Let the revolution begin” Thomas L. Friedman concludes in the NYT after considering the possibilities of e-learning and highlighting that easier access to education could solve problems.]

[This leads to asking: to what extent is e-learning revolutionary?]

[Two recent articles from the NYT dealing with MOOCs in the USA, a British article discussing e-training for workers, a graph and a cartoon, all partake in answering the question.]

[As 30% of US students are taking at least one online course today, it seems the revolution is threefold: learnerwise, technologywise and pedagogywise.]

1. Introducing the file with something from the file

2. Essay-question

3. Briefly introducing the documents.

4. Giving the structure.